Pam Harris

Pam Harris is the principal of Kitchen Sink Edits, a freelance editing and writing business. Pam's editorial journey began in April 2000, when at Cambridge University Press on a temporary assignment. She discovered that she enjoyed the work, and by that summer was a permanent member of the English Language Teaching department, enabling her to learn the publishing process from the bottom up. Her focus was on digital products such as websites and CD-ROMs, doing both development editing and activity writing.

Since April 2012, Pam has been a freelance development editor. Past and present clients include Cambridge University Press, LearningMate, Amnet Systems, ExceedCE, and Triumph Learning as well as independent authors acquired through Booktrope and Bibliocrunch. She specializes in guiding authors who have not worked with an editor before through the editorial process. Pam is also an author and has been a participant in National Novel Writing Month and Camp NaNo every session since November 2012. Her first novel, Oblivion, was published in April 2015.